

Journal of International Organizations Studies (JIOS)

The Journal of International Organizations Studies is the peer-reviewed journal of the United Nations Studies Association (UNSA), published in cooperation with the David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies at Brigham Young University. JIOS provides a forum for scholars who work on international organizations in a variety of disciplines. The journal aims to provide a window into the state of the art of research on international governmental organizations, supporting innovative approaches and interdisciplinary dialogue. The journal's mission is to explore new grounds and transcend the traditional perspective of international organizations as merely the sum of its members and their policies.

Details on Submission and Review

JIOS is published twice annually, in March and September, online and print-on-demand. Submission deadline for the fall issue is 1 May each year and for the spring issue is 1 November of the previous year. JIOS publishes three types of articles:

- Research papers (8,000–10,000 words, including footnotes and references)
- Insider's View (3,000–7,000 words, including footnotes and references): contributions from practitioners illuminating the inner workings of international organizations.
- Reviews of literature, disciplinary approaches or panels/workshops/conferences (single book reviews, panel or workshop reviews: 800–1,200 words, multiple book or subject reviews: 2,000–3,000 words, including footnotes and references)

Please send submissions to editors@journal-iostudies.org. For submissions and formatting guidelines, please see <http://www.journal-iostudies.org/how-submit-your-paper>. All papers will be reviewed by two or three external reviewers and then either accepted, rejected, or returned to the author(s) with the invitation to make minor corrections or revise and resubmit (medium to major changes). The final decision on acceptance of submissions rests solely with the editors.

CONTRIBUTORS

Anna Ohanyan is an associate professor and chair of the Department of Political Science and International Studies at Stonehill College. Ohanyan's second and most recent book is Networked Regionalism as Conflict Management (Stanford University Press 2015). She has published articles widely on international organizations, conflict resolution, and peacebuilding in such settings as Kosovo, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Afghanistan. She has served as a Fulbright scholar (2012–13) and a fellow at the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University (2002–04). Her research has been supported by organizations such as IREX, the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, and the German Marshall Fund, among others.

James Meernik is a professor of political science and director of the Castleberry Peace Institute at the University of North Texas. Meernik specializes in research on international justice and international courts, post-conflict peace building, and U.S. foreign policy. His research focuses on the judgments of the international criminal tribunals and the impact these decisions have on local populations. Currently, Meernik is working on projects related to victim and witness testimony at international tribunals, public opinion about international tribunals, and international human rights.

Kimi King is an associate professor of political science at the University of North Texas and has been visiting The Hague, leading study abroad programs, and conducting research on the International War Crimes Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia (ICTY) for almost two decades. King is conducting a comprehensive survey to examine the short- and long-term impacts of testifying on ICTY war crimes witnesses. Her research has been published in Social Science Quarterly and International Studies Perspectives.

Melissa McKay is a PhD graduate student at the University of North Texas and has focused her research on international criminal law including individual and state accountability, sentencing determinants and practices, and witness feedback. McKay has presented at the International Studies Association Annual Conference and has been a guest lecturer for internationally based organizations on the laws of war and international criminal tribunals.

Rosa Aloisi is an assistant professor in the Department of Political Science at Trinity University. Aloisi's research focuses on the work of international tribunals, human-rights institutions, the evolution of international criminal law, and the perpetration of gender crimes during conflicts. Currently, Aloisi is working on projects related to the implementation of human-rights agreements.

Michel Dupuy is a professor of international economics at the University of Bordeaux (France). Dupuy's research interests include international trade, international finance, macro-economic aspects of international trade, and international macroeconomics. He has published many books and articles in these fields. His recent publications focus on the exchange rate effects of quantitative easing and the modes of international trade organization.
